The Literature of Destruction

EDITED BY DAVID G. ROSKIES

An offering of such unusual scope, originality, and impact that it will become a classic of Jewish literature

"Perhaps this will mark the closing of the European canon. . . . Perhaps the subject of Jewish catastrophe will someday be rendered arcane," suggests the author, "and so this volume may serve as a reminder."

David Roskies, in one hundred powerful selections, presents the two-thousand-year history of Jewish responses to catastrophe. The cyclical nature of violent regimes and their overthrow is delineated in these recurring images of sin, martyrdom, and retribution that have sustained the Jewish people despite pogroms, massacres, and expulsions—from the destruction of the First Temple through the Holocaust to the eventual return to their homeland.

Critical praise:

"An anthology of sweeping brilliance, based on immensely rich pieces of writing and packed with learned allusion, action, and even humor, the book is a tour de force of literary, moral, and emotional complexity"—Israel Scene.

"A rich text"—Choice.

"Sensitive; incisive thinking"—Hadassah Magazine.

These selections support Roskies's premise that Holocaust literature, rather than being a unique genre, is a continuation—through literature—of the traditional Jewish reaction to catastrophe.

Here are biblical lamentations on exile, rabbinic midrash on martyrology, chronicles of the Spanish Inquisition, and protest poetry of the Cantonist era.

Modern voices, too, are heard. Roskies presents stunning pieces from writers never before translated and unknown to the modern reader. Three novellas attest to the siege of the shtetl between the wars, and numerous short stories, diaries, sermons, and poems express contemporary responses to the Holocaust.

650 pages. Paper, ISBN 0-8276-0414-9, $24.95

DAVID G. ROSKIES, Professor of Jewish Literature at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, is the author of a prize-winning critical study, Against the Apocalypse, to which this volume is the sequel. He is co-editor of Prooftexts, the journal of Jewish literary history.
