LIT 5510x Yiddish Modernism and Anti-Modernism 1920-1980

Wednesday 8:20-10:10; Kripke 512

Objectives: Eliezer Shteynbarg abandoned the sleepy Bessarabian town of Lipkan and headed for Czernowitz. Leivick reanimated Prague as the locus of redemption and Halpern turned Coney Island into the border of Exile. Markish, fresh from the front, took Jewish Warsaw by storm. Writing in New Haven, Anna Margolin imagined herself a pagan homosexual lover. Living in Vilna, Kulbak rhapsodized about the world entire. With everything up for grabs, in the wake of the First World War and the Bolshevik Revolution, how does one map the course of modern Yiddish literature? Why were the next sixty years its period of greatest flowering? One reason, this course proposes, was the fierce interplay between redemption and exile, the folk medium and high modernism, Prague and Coney Island, which produced, in the words of the Israeli poet Avrom Rintler, a landscape of rozhinkes mit Manger.

Requirements: One midterm paper and a final, take-home exam.

I have scheduled office hours on Thursdays 9:30-11:30 in Unterberg 506, and may be contacted via e-mail (darsoskies@jtsa.edu).
